I support some sensible efforts to produce clean energy sources such as this. However I do not support transmitting it across several states at the expense of our states beauty and our own environment. Especially when it involves taking our land against our wishes and harming the value of our property and the nearby properties. Doing this is not necessary and only makes more profits for the companies or individuals owning or benefitting from this venture. Again I am not against them producing the power in Oklahoma, but they need to sell and use it in Oklahoma instead of trying to increase profits by transmitting it to more profitable areas of the US. I find it hard to believe that this venture would produce more electricity than could be consumed in Oklahoma near point of production. I believe the owners and the parties behind it have better deals outside of Oklahoma that will increase their profits. Possibly deals with other utility companies such as TVA so that TVA can show or count this power toward their own requirements for clean sources. This is not right to the citizens of Arkansas and the land owners affected by this. Any promoted benefits such as increased jobs or purchases of construction products from Arkansas companies is short lived and just an attempt to win support while the state and land owners will be harmed for a lifetime. They do not care about anything but their profits or they would at least be putting all this underground where it would be much better, but still not great. Of course that costs more money and they are all about making money for themselves.

This is nothing but greed and I strongly oppose it and feel it is not necessary to transmit any of this power outside of the immediate production area.

Build it, produce it, and use the power locally. If it is so great then you will be a hero in Oklahoma and they can be your model. Your simply wanting to take it into other states to increase your profits and that is not what this should be about and at the expense of Arkansans and land owners.
