

BIOENERGY IMPACTS

Biofuel from non-food sources is becoming cheaper to produce

Researchers at Energy Department national laboratories, including National Renewable Energy Laboratory, are reducing the cost of producing biofuel from non-food sources (such as corn stalks, grasses, and forestry trimmings, and algae) by reducing and streamlining conversion process steps to producing ethanol and “drop-in” biofuels (a direct replacement for gasoline, diesel, and jet fuel).

To learn more, visit bioenergy.energy.gov.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF
ENERGY | Energy Efficiency &
Renewable Energy
BIOENERGY TECHNOLOGIES OFFICE

Photo courtesy of NREL.